"I bought this grinder for my second child 10 years ago and now am wanting to use it for my sixth child, so as you can see it has done a lot of grinding!!!!!"

M.R. sent us this note when she requested a replacement blade.

"I was so excited when I had heard from my friend about your Baby Food Mill. I was given one with my first child but it was made by a different company that apparently no longer exists. It's terrible to say, but I loved it so much that I didn't even lend it out for fear it would somehow get wrecked or broken. A lot of my friends in the same stage of life as us wondered where to get them. Now I can tell them Baby Love!...If I don't get them one first!" D.C., Saskatoon, SK.

The easiest way to serve your baby home-made baby food is to use a food mill to puree the same food that is being served to everyone else for the meal, provided that you are following a healthy menu. You also save money because you do not have to buy special "baby food", and you can control the "additives". If there are meals consisting of foods which baby is not ready for, you can have some frozen food cubes handy. On days when you have leftover vegetables, fruits, meats, that can be eaten by baby, just grind the extra in the food mill. Put it in the cube sections of an ice cube tray, cover, and freeze quickly. Or, freeze spoonfuls of the pureed food on a cookie sheet (cover it with wax paper). When it is frozen solid, take the cubes or spoonfuls of food and store them in a freezer bag. Remove the air from the bag to prevent loss of vitamins. Label and date it. When you wish to use a cube or two, warm it by putting it in a double boiler or in a little dish sitting in a bigger dish of hot water. To avoid burning baby with "hot spots", do not microwave. Do not re-freeze the left-overs.

MSG in Baby Cereal
 If your rice cereal package says "hydrolyzed rice" in the ingredient list, be aware that some MSG is created during the chemical process, and also that the manufacturer may add pure MSG without designating so on the label! Currently Heinz cereal and Pablum is not "hydrolyzed", but other brands are.

When using the stroller to carry bags or packages, be sure that the weight will not cause the stroller to tip.

A stroller should have a base wide enough to prevent tipping, even when baby leans over the side.

Make sure the stroller does not tip backwards when the child is in a reclining position.

LOGLIFE BIBS

These bibs are the best you can buy! They will long outlast the cheap terry bibs with plastic backing that cracks after a few washings. To keep baby's chest dry, they have a waterproof fabric backing that stays soft--won't harden or tear, even after many washings. Thick and thirsty terry soaks up any spills. (We don't put crumb-catching pockets on our bibs because bibs with crumb-catchers are germ traps--they won't come completely clean in the washer.) Velcro fasteners--Velcro is quick, doesn't knot, doesn't tangle in hair. Fully machine washable and dryable. Color choices: pink, baby blue, lilac, mint, pastel yellow, royal blue, white, seagreen, red.

MONGRAMMED BIBS

Personalize any longlife bib with baby's name. (Great gift idea too!) Add $5.00 to bib price for monogramming. For lace trim add $3.00.

Dear Baby Love:
I just couldn't send in my order without letting you know how much I love your bibs! I found that out of all the bibs I received as shower gifts, none came even close to the quality of your terry cloth bibs.
Your velcro fastener makes for a quick putting on and taking off and I especially like your nylon backing, which unlike others, has not cracked in over 2 1/2 years of washing! Many other bibs don't even have a plastic backing which results in food/milk soaking through to baby's clothes. In fact, the only bib I use now is yours; I've thrown the rest away! Being able to add baby's name to the bib is also a great touch! I'm now ordering bibs for a friend of mine who recently became a first time mother and I most definitely will be ordering more for my next baby! B.K.
